PHX CITY MUNICIPAL COURT

RULING

This Petition for Special Action has been under advisement since the time of oral argument on July 11, 2005. This Court has considered and reviewed the record of the proceedings from the Phoenix Municipal Court and the excellent pleadings and memoranda submitted by counsel.

I. Jurisdiction

This Court has jurisdiction over special actions pursuant to the Arizona Constitution Article, VI, Section 18, and Rule 4(b), Arizona Rules of Procedure for Special Actions.

The exercise and acceptance of special action jurisdiction is highly discretionary,¹ and therefore, the decision to accept jurisdiction encompasses a variety of determinants.² Acceptance of special action jurisdiction is appropriate where an issue is one of first impression regarding a purely legal question, is of statewide importance, and is likely to arise again. In this matter, special action jurisdiction will be exercised to resolve a purely legal question of whether the Petitioner, Jeffrey S. Abuhl, is entitled to a jury trial for the charge of False Reporting. Moreover, there is a clear issue presented here of county-wide importance to all limited jurisdiction courts, that is likely to arise again. This Court will accept special action jurisdiction in this case.

II. Factual and Procedural Background

This is a Special Action Petition from the Phoenix City Court. The only issue presented in this case is whether the offense of False Reporting to the police is jury trial eligible pursuant to Derendal v. Griffith. The State, Real Party in Interest, has charged Jeffrey S. Abuhl, Petitioner, with False Reporting to the police in violation of A.R.S. § 13-2907.01(A)(1). On February 25, 2005, the State filed a motion arguing that the crime was not jury eligible. On April, 21, 2005, after hearing argument on the matter, the Respondent Court (the Honorable Lynda Howell, Phoenix City Court Judge) ruled that the crime was not jury eligible. Petitioner then commenced this Petition for Special Action.

III. Issue Presented in this Case

The Petitioner asserts in this Special Action Complaint that (1) the trial judge erred by not following the appellate decision in Mungarro v. Riley and (2) that the offense of false reporting is still jury eligible after Derendal because it was codified as a jury triable offense in Arizona Territorial law. The Petitioner requests that this Court reverse the Order of the Phoenix City Court and remand the matter back to the Respondent Court directing that Petitioner be granted a trial by jury.

IV. Discussion of the Issues

Recently, the Arizona Supreme Court announced its decision in Derendal v. Griffith.³ There, the court was asked to consider whether Arizona should retain the previous test set out in Rothweiler v. Superior Court,⁴ to determine when the Arizona Constitution mandates that a criminal offense be eligible for trial by jury. In Rothweiler, the court fashioned a test to determine whether a Defendant is entitled to a jury trial in a particular criminal offense. Under that test, the court looked to: (1) the relationship of the offense to the common law crimes; (2) the severity of the statutory penalties that apply; and (3) the moral quality of the act.⁵ In Derendal, the court modified the test by eliminating the moral quality element. The Court held that the current analysis of jury trial eligibility of misdemeanor offense requires a two step process. First, the court must determine whether a statutory offense has a common law antecedent that guaranteed a right to a trial by jury at the time of Arizona statehood.⁶ If so, the inquiry concludes. If there is no common law antecedent for which a jury trial was required, the court must determine whether the offense is “serious” enough to warrant a jury trial.⁷

A. The Right to a Jury Trial for Misdemeanor Cases at Common Law in Arizona

Article II, Section 23 of the Arizona Constitution provides that the right to a jury trial “shall remain inviolate”, and preserves the right to a jury trial as it existed at the time Arizona adopted its constitution.⁸ Jury eligibility is firmly linked to an offense’s common law status, not a pre-statehood statutory entitlement. Thus, the constitution requires that the state guarantee the right to a jury trial to a defendant where the offense charged was granted a jury trial at common law prior to statehood.⁹

Where the right to a jury trial existed for an offense prior to statehood, the right cannot be denied for modern statutory offenses of the same “character or grade.”¹⁰ To constitute a common law jury-eligible offense as an antecedent to a modern offense, the modern offense must contain elements comparable to those found in the common law offenses. Mere similarity of the modern crime to a common law offense, without regard to the common law jury eligibility of that offense, is not enough.¹¹ Likewise, similarity between the modern offense and another modern offense for which a jury eligible common law antecedent exists is also not enough. Rather, to be jury trial eligible, the modern offense must have substantially similar elements to a common law offense that was itself jury trial eligible.

(1) The Right to a Jury Trial Prior to Arizona Statehood

It is clear that Arizona territorial law liberally granted an absolute right to a jury trial for all criminal offenses. In 1863, the United States Congress established Arizona as a Territory. Article 8 of the Territorial Bill of Rights, adopted on October 4, 1864, provided:

The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, but a jury trial may be waived by parties in civil cases in the manner prescribed by law.

Similarly, the first Penal Code of 1887, also referred to as the “Howell Code,” contained the following provision guaranteeing every person the right to a jury trial for all public offenses:

Section 14. No person can be convicted of a public offence, unless by a verdict of a jury accepted and recorded by the court, or upon a plea of guilty, or upon judgment against him upon a demurrer to the indictment in the case, mentioned in this chapter.¹²

Identical language to this provision also appeared in each of the three subsequent revisions of the Arizona Code.¹³ The Howell Code also contained the following provision, hand-written by the scrivener, regarding the conduct of misdemeanor jury trials:

Sec. 1582. Issues of fact must be tried by Jury unless a trial by jury be waived in criminal cases not amounting to felony by consent of both parties expressed in open court and entered in its minutes. In cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of twelve or any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court.¹⁴

With respect to jury trials, the 1901 Penal Code provided that:

Sec. 1191. A trial by jury shall be had if demanded by either the territory or the defendant; but unless such demand is made before the commencement of trial, a trial by jury shall be deemed waived.
...¹⁵

From these authorities, I conclude that the statutory right to a jury trial existed in Arizona for all misdemeanor and felony offenses prior to, and at the time of statehood. It is quite clear from the Territorial statutes that existed prior to Arizona's statehood that jury trials for misdemeanor offenses were regularly held. However, I find that such misdemeanor jury trials were held pursuant to statutory authority, rather than common law authority.

(2) The Offense of False Reporting from Arizona Statehood to Present

There appears to have been a Territorial antecedent to the offense of what is currently known as "false reporting." The 1901 Penal Code provided that:

Every person who practices any fraud or deceit or knowingly makes or exhibits any false statement, representation, token or writing, to any witness, or person about to be called as a witness upon any trial, proceeding, inquiry or investigation whatever, authorized by law, with intent to affect the testimony of such witness, is guilty of a misdemeanor (emphasis added).¹⁶

Petitioner argues that because the offense of false reporting has a territorial antecedent, that it is jury eligible. Once again, however, the misdemeanor offense of “false reporting” was jury eligible pursuant to statutory authority, rather than common law authority.

The current statute of false reporting, A.R.S. § 13-2907.01, provides as follows:

It is unlawful for a person to knowingly make to a law enforcement agency of either this state or a political subdivision of this state a false, fraudulent or unfounded report or statement or to knowingly misrepresent a fact for the purpose of interfering with the orderly operation of a law enforcement agency or misleading a peace officer.

The issue of whether the current statute of false reporting is a jury eligible offense today was previously decided by the Court of Appeals in Mungarro v. Riley.¹⁷ There, the Court found the offense of false reporting to be jury eligible because it was a crime involving moral turpitude. Therefore, Petitioner argues that the lower court and this court are bound by the holding of that case granting a jury trial for false reporting. The Mungarro Court, however, analyzed false reporting under all three elements of the Rothweiler test. In doing so, the Court held that false reporting did not qualify for a jury trial under Rothweiler's common law requirement because the court found that the offense was not a crime at common law.¹⁸ The Court further determined that the potential penalties arising from conviction of the misdemeanor offense of false reporting were insufficient to warrant a jury trial.¹⁹ On the moral quality element of the Rothweiler test, however, the Court concluded that false reporting was jury eligible because it was a crime of moral turpitude.²⁰ As noted earlier, Derendal eliminated the moral quality element of the Rothweiler test. Accordingly, I conclude that whether false reporting is still jury eligible today must be analyzed pursuant to the Derendal analysis.

(3) There is No Common Law Right to a Jury Trial for the Offense of False Reporting

If a defendant had a right to a jury trial under the common law at the time the Arizona Constitution was adopted, that right was preserved by the Arizona Constitution. As previously noted, Derendal makes clear that in order to qualify for jury trial eligibility, a modern offense must have a clear link to a common law offense in either exact or same grade/character. Case law illustrates that Arizona has long used broad common law concepts transported from England, as amended by parliamentary statute, as the benchmark for Arizona's common law.²¹ Common law is not the statutory Arizona Territorial law as it existed when the Arizona Constitution was adopted. Rather, the Arizona Supreme Court has traced the adoption of the common law in Arizona as follows:

Let us, therefore, look to the common law to determine the nature and extent to the right which it gives, so far as Arizona is concerned. Our legislature first adopted the common law in the Howell Code in the following language.

‘The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to, or inconsistent with the Constitution and Laws of the United States, or the Bill of Rights or laws of this Territory, is hereby adopted, and shall be the rule of decision in all of the Court’s of this territory.’

It was soon discovered that in many features the old common law was inapplicable to our conditions, and in 1887 the language above-set forth was modified by paragraph 2935, Code of 1887, to read as follows:

‘The common law of England so far only as it is consistent with and adapted to the natural and physical condition of this territory, and the necessities of the people thereof, and not repugnant to, or inconsistent with the Constitution of the united States, or Bill of Rights, or Laws of this Territory, or established customs of the people of this territory, is hereby adopted and shall be the rule of the decision in all of the courts of this territory.’

And it is substantially in this form that it has been carried forward through the Codes of 1901 (paragraph 2533) and 1913 (paragraph 5555) into that of 1928 (Sec. 3043).²²

In context of these statutes, the Arizona Supreme Court has interpreted Arizona common law through legislation to mean:

[T]he unwritten or common law of England, together with acts of parliament of a general nature, not local to Great Britain, which had been passed and were enforced at time of separation of colonies from the mother country so far as they are suitable to wants, conditions, and circumstances in Arizona.²³

The current statute, A.R.S. § 1-201, regarding the common law in Arizona provides as follows:

The common law only so far as it is consistent with and adapted to the natural and physical conditions of this state and the necessities of the people thereof, and not repugnant to or inconsistent with the constitution of the United States or the constitution or laws of this state, or established customs of the people of this state, is adopted and shall be the rule of decision in all courts of this state.²⁴

The Court of Appeals held in Mungarro that there is no common law antecedent to the crime of false reporting.²⁵ Because the common law element utilized in Mungarro is the same as that set forth in Derendal, this part of the Mungarro holding survives and remains in effect. Furthermore, the territorial antecedent alluded to by Petitioner does not support his assertion that the false reporting was jury eligible at common law. Territorial statutes guaranteeing the right to a jury trial do not equate to the right at common law to a jury trial. Therefore, this Court concludes that it would be inconsistent with the definition of the common law as it exists in Arizona for this Court to find that the crime of false reporting required a jury trial at common law.

B. The Right to Jury Trial Secured By Article II, §§ 23 and 24 of the Arizona Constitution

Although the issue is vaguely mentioned by the State, this court would like to take the opportunity to discuss the Arizona Constitution as it is relevant to this case. Article II, §§ 23 and 24 of the Arizona Constitution guarantees a jury trial right to all criminal defendants. Article II, Section 23, as amended in 1972, currently provides that:

The right of a trial by jury shall remain inviolate. Juries in criminal cases in which a sentence of death or imprisonment for thirty years or more is authorized by law shall consist of twelve persons. In all criminal cases the unanimous consent of the jurors shall be necessary to render a verdict. In all other cases, the number of jurors, not less than six, and the number required to render a verdict, shall be specified by law.

Article II, § 24 further provides that:

In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to have a speedy public trial by an impartial jury

Arizona case law is clear with regard to the construction and application of the current Article II, Section 23. This section does not give the right to a jury trial but guarantees preservation of such right. In other words, the right is applicable only where it existed under common law at time this section was adopted.²⁶ Moreover, statutory jury trial rights existing at the adoption of the Arizona Constitution were not preserved by Article II, § 23.²⁷ The constitutional guarantee of a trial by jury is not a grant, but a preservation of a pre-statehood right.

In addition, it is well established that the right to a jury trial possessed by criminal defendants under the Arizona Constitution does not apply to petty offenses.²⁸ Only the right to a jury trial for serious offenses has been preserved for criminal defendants by both the federal and state constitutions, rendering serious offenses jury trial eligible while petty offenses are not.²⁹ Therefore, Article II, Section 23 does not independently grant a right to a jury trial to all criminal defendants, but reserves the right to a jury trial for those accused of serious offenses.³⁰ The offense of false reporting is a class one misdemeanor with a maximum jail term of six months, and as such, is presumed as a petty offense.

In sum, the Court is unable to find any case law or legislative history that would indicate that Article II, Section 23 mandates a jury trial for the misdemeanor offense of false reporting. However, this Court does acknowledge the importance of the preservation of a jury trial right where such right exists. As Justice Scalia recently noted:

That right is no mere procedural formality, but a fundamental reservation of power in our constitutional structure. Just as suffrage ensures the people's ultimate control in the legislative and executive branches, jury trial is meant to ensure their control in the judiciary.³¹

In this case, however, the Court is unable to find any preservation of such a right as it existed at common law for the misdemeanor offense of false reporting.

C. The Misdemeanor Offense of False Reporting is Not a “Serious” Offense

Finally, as articulated in Derendal, when the legislature classifies an offense as a misdemeanor, punishable by not more than six months incarceration, the offense will be presumed “petty,” falling outside of the jury trial entitlement of Article II, Section 23 of the Arizona Constitution.³² To rebut this presumption, a misdemeanor defendant must show that the offense qualifies as a “serious offense.” First, the penalty must be derived from statutory Arizona law.³³ Second, the consequence must be severe.³⁴

The fines and periods of maximum incarceration for the offense of False Reporting all fall within the parameters of other misdemeanor offenses. Even the potential jail time is easily within the statutory maximum for misdemeanors of six months. Therefore, I find that the Petitioner has not met his burden in this case of overcoming the presumption that the misdemeanor offense of False Reporting carries additional severe, direct, statutory consequences that would reflect the legislature’s judgment that the offense is “serious” to entitle him to a jury trial.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to the test set forth in Derendal, the Petitioner is not entitled to a jury trial in this case. The Court finds that Arizona law does not provide a constitutional right to a jury trial for the misdemeanor offense of False Reporting and the Respondent Judge did not err in denying Petitioner’s request for a jury trial. The Court further concludes that although misdemeanor jury trials regularly occurred in Arizona prior to and at the time of statehood, such jury trials were held pursuant to statutory authority. Accordingly, the Court finds no common law antecedent to the crime of False Reporting where a jury trial was granted that would entitle a defendant today to a jury trial in Arizona for the offense of False Reporting.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED accepting jurisdiction in this Special Action.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED denying the relief requested.
